Spiti Valley

A LITTLE TIBET

ABOUT THE PLACE

Separated from fertile Lahaul by the soaring 4551 m Kunzum La, the trans-Himalayan region of Spiti is another chunk of Tibet marooned in India. The scattered villages in this serrated, moonscape atrive like mirages, clusters of white washed mud-brick homes huddled amid green barley fields below monasteries perched on crags a thousand feet above. The turquoise-grey ribbon of the Spiti River is your near-constant companion, running along a fairly broad valley before turning south at Sumdointo the precipitous gorges of the Hangrang Valley.
